Week 9 prop projections

2026 NFL season · model run Monday, Nov 9 at 4:58 PM · 1 upcoming games · 20 props · 14 final

How to read it

The median is the model's 50/50 line. Dark bar: the middle 50% of likely outcomes (25th–75th percentile). Light bar: the middle 80% (10th–90th).

Before you bet

Two methods, blended. Each median mixes the stats model with a game simulation (every game played snap by snap 1,000 times with each team’s play-calling, tempo and 4th-down habits and each player’s usage, tuned to the betting market). Simulation weight: passing 50%, rushing 50%, receiving yards 20%, receptions 20%. On unseen games the blend beat the stats model alone: passing +0.9%, rushing +1.8%, receiving yards +0.4%, receptions +0.4%. “Stats · Sim” shows both medians; amber = they differ by 20%+.

Touchdowns. Chance of at least one rushing or receiving TD (no passing or return TDs), blending the stats model (TD history, red-zone and goal-line role, implied points, opponent) with the simulation (50% weight). On 2026’s games (not used to choose the weight) the blend’s log loss was 0.2% lower (better) than the stats model’s alone. “Fair” = break-even odds; First TD = the game’s first touchdown, from the simulation. Books take a big margin on touchdown markets: look for prices well above fair. Amber = the methods differ by 8+ points.

New starting QBs: Carson Wentz (MIN). Confirm them in the news (the schedule data has listed wrong starters before) and treat their passing as optimistic: in 2025–26 both methods ran ~20 yards high on new starters (backtest through 2026 week 8; not the case in 2021–23).

Flags = latest injury report; Returning = missed recent games; New team = changed teams. Projections assume flagged players play: rerun after Friday’s final designations and check the inactive lists (out about 90 minutes before kickoff): when a player sits, his teammates’ numbers, touchdowns included, go up. Estimates, not guarantees.
